Last Month Speaker

Dennis Molnar with David Osoba

Interest in Dennis Molnar's subject "The Falklands War" was evidenced by the standing room only turnout of our membership. His well researched and insightful presentation lived up to everyone's expectations.

Dennis took us from the early days of claimed ownership of the Falklands by France, Spain and England, through to the factors leading up to the conflict in 1982 between Argentina and Great Britain and the uneasy situation which continues to this day.

In 1820 Argentina claimed ownership of the Islands (known to them as the Malvinas) only to have that ownership denied by the British who according to their stated position were just legally "reasserting" their ownership rights (the Argentines called that action piracy, not reassertion). What ensued over many years was a series of posturings involving who got passports and from which country, supply ships from Britain being withdrawn, to name just two aggravations that both sides used to feed the fire of distrust and resentment of each other.

Finally, it boiled over in 1982 when the Argentine junta seemingly desperate to take their citizens minds off the wretched economy (150% inflation), and recently having taken delivery of 250 Mirage Jets, decided to flex its muscles and invade the Islands. Britain under the "Iron Lady" Margaret Thatcher was not about to back away.

Despite the great distance from Britain to the Falklands a significant task force was mobilized in very short order and soon the engagement was underway commencing with the torpedo sinking of the Argentine cruiser Belgrano. A two month war ensued that very quickly ended with the Argentines withdrawing their navy and being soundly defeated on land.

Today little has changed. Argentina still claims sovereignty and Britain just as strongly claims the Islands to be their "overseas territory". All of this over a group of islands with little present strategic or economic value, barren islands constituting 12,173 sq. km. with less than 4,000 people, and an economy largely dependent on sheep farming and fishing, and lately with a developing tourism industry with almost 40,000 visitors annually. However, some suggest there is possible future potential for valuable offshore oil and gas or mineral interests in the surrounding seabed.

Editor's Addendum: As Franklin said in a letter to Quincy "There never was a good war or a bad peace."

President's Report

President David Osoba

That was quite the talk on The Falklands war by Dennis Molnar. Very well done!

I can't help but comment, however. What was the point of it all? I know of course that many wars, large and small are fought to preserve a way of life, e.g., democracy versus totalitarianism. But what was the point of the Falklands war?

A little more patience on both sides and a more active role by a motivated mediator (the USA?) would have prevented the loss of priceless young lives and the tremendous material costs that were incurred. In the end Argentineans still feel that The Malvinas belong to them and Britain maintains an expensive outpost far from its mainland. This situation is reminiscent of St. Pierre and Miquelon – France continues to keep up this expensive piece of history just off the coast of Canada.

Of course, in the end, it's the citizens of these outposts that should decide where they want to belong and, up till now, despite the expenses, they have decided to keep the status quo. So be it! Thanks again to Dennis for reminding us of this important issue.

December is the festive season. I wish everyone and their loved ones the best of everything and hope that the New Year will be a happy one!

David Osoba
