Dr. Marra will discuss the use of whole genome analysis to inform treatment planning for cancer. The Personalized OncoGenomics (POG) pilot project initiated in 2012 aims to assess the general feasibility of whole genome analysis in the context of a cancer centre like the BC Cancer Agency, including examining the uptake of whole genome technology by medical professionals. President's Notes

Congratulations to all who made it through the winter.

Looking back - March was a great month - Spring arrived, St. Patrick's Day Ides of March and a great discussion on the middle east. Our March meeting had the highest attendance of the year. It was in response to the quality of our speaker as well another sign of Spring - the slow return of our snowbird members - see more getting back each day.

Looking forward - April sees a Seaspan tour, another great speaker and Easter. Phil and his team get the next bridge season off to a start on April 3rd and Phil is in the final stage of planning the golf season to run from May to September.

Should be a great season for both groups and I encourage anyone with interest in participating to please see Phil Boase, Barry Heselgrave or Fraser Grant for bridge and Phil for golf.

You may have noticed a new name on the left hand side of page one. The Management Committee is pleased to welcome Gary Sutherland as the Chair of the House Committee and want to take this opportunity to introduce him to the members. Gary approached me after last meeting and volunteered to take on the role. Great to have him on the team.

Our special events and speakers committees have set up great programs for the balance of the year. For those not able to attend our March meeting, it was announced that after a review of other available venues on the North Shore, the MC confirmed we will be hosting all our meetings at the Capilano Golf and Country Club (with exception of our June meeting which will be held at the West Vancouver Yacht Club).

Happy Easter - trust you will celebrate in your chosen way with your family, loved ones and friends.

Last Month Speaker - Dr. André Gerolymatos

President Dave Walker thanks speaker André Gerolymatos

The speaker at our March meeting was Dr. Andre Gerolymatos, Chair of Hellenic Studies at Simon Fraser University. This was his 11th address to Probus, and I am sure he will be returning again. Dr. Gerolymatos is an entertaining speaker, and he has a practiced way of speaking that makes his message clear and easy to follow. No doubt well developed for the university lecture hall environment, it was an excellent style for communicating with our members. He also wore some of the more colourful shoes and socks we have seen on our speakers.

His official subject was “The Middle East and the Trump Factor”. It really was a presentation about how the western powers have continually had it wrong. The subtitle was “100 years of errors.”

In his opinion the current problems date back to the collapse of the Ottoman Empire following the First World War. The Middle East was occupied by Britain and France, but in short, the area did not take well to western ideas of local democracy, colonial government and nationalism. In fact, although our speaker did not say so, this area has resisted foreign influence from the time of the Egyptian and Babylonian empires. The Ottoman Empire had been tolerated, as it was a unitary state, and the people were united by Islamic culture. It was tolerant of other religions and the various ethnic groups that made up the population, and it had not been a Turkish nationalist state. The British and French Empires were not seen as an improvement.

Oil had a large and growing role in the complex relationships. Control of the Middle East by European nations was a source of international power, particularly for Britain. With the collapse of British and French rule following the Second World War another power vacuum resulted, this time filled by the Russians, followed very soon afterward by the Americans, looking primarily to block the advance of Communism.

This gives us today’s complex environment. The local forces of nationalism and tribalism compete with the complexities of Islam. Imported cultures, including both Communism and western democracy exist only weakly, while what should be a unifying and peaceful Islamic culture is overcome by sectarian issues and violence that is as much tribal based as religious based.

One of the errors in western thinking, pointed out by our speaker, is that our conception of the various terrorist groups is wrong. In his opinion it is just as wrong to think that terrorist behaviour is integral to Islam as it would have been to consider the IRA as integral to Roman Catholicism.

This brings us to today’s environment. The cultural, religious and political differences of all the parties come together in ever-changing combinations. Nothing seems to work, and of greater importance, what can a new President do that actually would work?

Our speaker’s answer is the new President can’t do much. This is in part because the wrong questions are being asked, and the answers given relate to a fundamental misunderstanding of the real situation. Typically, Western governments have made bad strategic recommendations based on these misunderstandings.

Both the Russian and Americans have experienced serious setbacks in the area: the Americans in Iraq and the Russians in Afghanistan. As a side effect, each has managed to strengthen the local forces of local nationalism and violence.

It really seems that when someone intervenes the problem simply gets worse. Our speaker’s opinion is that perhaps the real answer lies in not intervening. Let the local forces work to resolve local issues that are the real fundamental basis of the century long problem. Perhaps Trump’s inclination to be an isolationist may actually be the right answer, and he may become effective in spite of himself.
